

Amanda Schnetzer

Amanda Schnetzer is founding director of the Human Freedom Initiative at the George W. Bush Institute, an action-oriented, nonpartisan policy organization based in Dallas, Texas. At the Institute, Amanda is responsible for research and programmatic efforts to help advance freedom by developing leaders in emerging democracies, standing with those who still live under tyranny, and fostering U.S. leadership through policy and action. Previously, Amanda was a senior fellow and director of studies at Freedom House. She began her career at the American Enterprise Institute, supporting research and programming on U.S. foreign policy and international politics. Amanda is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations. She holds degrees from Georgetown University and Southern Methodist University, where she graduated Phi Beta Kappa.
